

Homeopathy Research and Resources

The following homeopathy research and resource list lends current credibility for your reference and further exploration on this effective modern natural therapy.

Homeopathic medicine, in over 200 years of use and research, has been found in countless cases to assist the body's natural healing process for all types of illness, validating its provings and efficacy. Homeopathy is practiced worldwide and is very popular in Europe, India, and Pakistan. For example, it is the third most popular medicine in India, where 10% of the population uses it, making India the largest consumer of homeopathic medicine in the world. In England there are five operating homeopathic hospitals. A homeopathic medical school recently opened in Arizona, the first of its kind since the closure of several in the United States back in 1920s. Homeopathy is significantly less expensive than conventional drugs with no known side effects when combined with pharmaceuticals. There is more and more research being conducted all over the world supporting homeopathy. In India alone there are 37+ homeopathic research centers, some of which are financed by the government.

A service evaluation at Bristol Homeopathic Hospital recorded the outcome of homeopathic treatments in over 6,500 consecutive patients over a 6 year period.[3] At follow-up, 70% of patients reported an improvement in their health, including 50% who reported "major improvement." Patients were referred by their GP or hospital specialist after conventional options had failed or because conventional treatment was contraindicated. The best clinical results were seen in the treatment of children with eczema and asthma, and in adults with inflammatory bowel disease, irritable bowel syndrome, menopausal problems and migraines. Other conditions which improved after homeopathic treatment included arthritis, depression, and chronic fatigue syndrome. J Altern Complement Med 2005; 5: 793-8. <http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed?term=16296912>.
